WEIRD SCENE AT A GRAVE. A scene, intensely dramatic and en tirely unlooked for, was enacted at a new-made grave in the Lutheran Cemetery at Reading, Pa., on Thursday af ternoon. Mrs. Peter Eyrich, No. 2, who has been separated from her husand for some time, and had just learned that he was dead and about to be buried, awaited the arrival of his funeral procession at the grave, and there, in the midst of the mourners, she rushed up to the brink of the tomb, held aloft her marriage certificate, and exclaimed, in a voice loud enough certainly for all present to hear:

"He is my husband, and I have a right to see him. Here is our marriage certificate, signed by Rev. Mr. Stein-metz, who is the pastor in charge here Then Mrs. Eyrich confronted the of-ficiating undertaker, and said: "You had better not dare to lower that coffin, as I have a right to see the remains of my husband! It is true wa vere separated; but were never di-

The now greatly excited woman ushed several persons aside, made are way to the coffin and commanded the undertaker to romove the lid. He obeyed, and then followed one of the most extraordinary scenes ever witnessed in a graveyard. While the mourners stood spelibound and aghast the widow, fairly beside herself herself with grief and anxiety, stood gazing fixedly at the remains for a moment, then, quickly stooping, kissed the face of the nead man, sobbed and became bysterical and was only calmed when Rev. Mr. Connor, who assisted at the funeral, gently spoke to her, and assured her that there was no objection whatever to the gratification of her melancholy

Then the burial service proceeded without disturbance, and other rela-tives also viewed the remains once

Mrs. Eyrich subsequently claimed that she had been informed that the people with whom her husband had lived were determined that she should reason she had taken this extraordinary course.

Mr. Eyrich's daughter by his first wile, however, says that the family did not refuse permission to Mrs. Eyrich to attend the funeral.
